The Politeness Theory: A Guide for Everyone | UniversalClass

Politeness theory is based on the concept that people have a social self-image that they consciously project and try to protect.
This sense of self-image is referred to as “face.” The theory was developed in 1978 by researchers Penelope Brown and Stephen C.
Levinson.

What Is the Politeness Theory? (with pictures)

Politeness theory states that some speech acts threaten others' face needs. The concept of 'face' has come to play an important role in politeness theory. Brown and Levinson, for example, have chosen it as the central notion for their study of universals in language usage and politeness phenomena (1978, 1987).

best known and most widely used approach to the study of politeness is the framework introduced by Penelope Brown and Stephen C. Levinson in Questions and Politeness (1978); reissued with corrections as Politeness: Some Universals in Language Usage (Cambridge Univ. Press, 1987). Brown and Levinson's theory of linguistic politeness is sometimes referred to as the "'face-saving' theory of politeness."

(PDF) A Critique of Politeness Theories

Politeness theory, proposed by Penelope Brown and Stephen C. Levinson, centers on the notion of politeness, construed as efforts on redressing the affronts to a person's self-esteems of effectively claiming positive social values in social interactions. Such self-esteem is referred as the sociological concept of face (as in "save face" or "lose face") to discuss politeness as a response to ...

Their theory leads back to the term of “face” introduced by the sociologist Ervin Goffman. Face in the context of politeness describes the wish of every member of a community to guard his or her face from possible damage through social interferences (Compare: “To loose one’s face” etc.). There are two kinds of politeness strategies because there are two kinds of different faces that have to be
