New 256GB RAM and Radeon Pro Vega 64X upgrade options added in March 2019, and in August 2020 the base configuration was bumped to the 10-core processor. A high-end 27-inch iMac with some spec upgrades is, however, actually a better buy than an iMac Pro, surpassing the aging iMac Pro in both CPU and graphics performance at a lower price point.

The base 13" Pro was always more of a "prosumer" device (arguably the entire 13" Pro line is), so I'm guessing that Apple was less concerned about M1's display limitations. The Intel model could support 2 external displays, but could not support a 6K display. In any case, they did leave the 4-port model as Intel for now.
