Natural Disasters Cultural Responses Case Studies Toward A Global Environmental History is an intriguing collection of essays that examine environmental history through the lens of natural disasters that have occurred around the world, and throughout time. These essays serve not only to document the events under discussion, but also to illustrate how these events are studied and quantified. While natural disasters appear everywhere on the globe, different cultures, societies, and nations have adopted specific styles for coping with disaster. Indeed, how humans deal with catastrophes depends largely on social and cultural patterns, values, religious belief systems, political institutions, and economic structures.
