DNA replication restart pathways enable bacterial cells to reinitiate DNA replication when replication has been disrupted due to encounters with DNA damage, thereby allowing complete and faithful duplication of the cell's genetic information.

Download File PDF Pria

Neisseria gonorrhoeae is a bacterium that is highly adapted to survive oxidative damage to its DNA incurred by attack from immune cells in infected individuals, suggesting that DNA replication restart pathways might play a critical role in N. gonorrhoeae pathogenicity. The bacterial helicase, PriA, is a key primosome protein that plays essential roles in DNA replication restart pathways. However, little is known of the mechanism by which PriA

Download File

performs these roles in N. gonorrhoeae. I performed equilibrium DNA binding assays and DNA unwinding assays to provide insight into the mechanisms by which PriA functions in DNA replication restart pathways. I report that DNA binding by PriA is strongly dependent on the structure of the DNA. DNA substrates that resemble a DNA replication fork with a three-way branch are bound with higher affinity than partial duplex structures or single-stranded DNA. PriA-

Download File

Download File PDF Pria

catalyzed DNA unwinding is also DNA structure-specific, and PriA-catalyzed unwinding decreases upon increasing the length of the duplex DNA, indicating that PriA is a low-processivity helicase. Another primosome protein, PriB, strongly stimulates the helicase activity of PriA, and this activity might facilitate reloading of the replication machinery by PriA at repaired replication forks. Stimulation of PriA by PriB appears to occur through a mechanism that is distinct from that used by the well-studied E. coli primosome proteins.

Download File

The mechanism by which genetic information is duplicated and transmitted to future generations in all organisms requires the coordination of several multi-protein complexes. These genome maintenance complexes

Download File

generally bind and unwind duplex DNA to allow access to genomic information. In Escherichia coli and related bacteria, initiation of DNA replication occurs at a unique site (oriC) on a circular chromosome at which two replisome complexes assemble and then replicate bi-directionally away from this initiation site. However, approximately once per cell cycle, the replisomes encounter DNA damage or stalled protein complexes that prematurely

force the replication machinery off the template, leaving partially duplicated chromosomes. This situation presents a potentially lethal situation for the cell and requires a sequence-independent system that reloads the replisome onto sites far removed from oriC. This DNA structure-dependent process of reloading the replisome is achieved through a group of proteins collectively known as the DNA replication restart primosome (RRP) and their functions are essential in bacteria. The RRP is composed of four proteins (PriA, PriB, PriC, and DnaT) that work in diverse pathways to reload the replicative helicase, DnaB, onto abandoned replication forks. PriA, a 3' to 5' helicase, is the most evolutionarily conserved member of the RRP, and it defines the dominant pathway by which replication restart occurs in bacteria. However, the lack of high-resolution structural data for PriA has hindered studies to understand how it
