One of the most-important general principles of criminal law is that an individual normally cannot be convicted of a crime without having intended to commit the act in question. With few exceptions, the individual does not need to know that the act itself is a crime, as ignorance of the law is no excuse for criminal behaviour.

Notes | Digestible Notes
A fundamental principle of criminal law, with regards to the common law is that the prosecution has the element of proving the defendant's guilt in every aspect. This was mentioned in DPP v Woolmington by Lord Sankey as 'throughout the English criminal law one golden rule thread is always to be seen, that it is the duty of the prosecution to prove the prisoner's guilt'.
